Where did the Dafler name come from? How many Daflers are there, and are they all related to me? Why do we live where we live, and how did my ancestors decide to live there? Did they lead interesting lives? Were they well off, or poor? And most of all – what’s the story of how our family became Americans?

In this brief document, we’ll give you a glimpse at some answers to those questions. We’ll invite you to review the family tree as we know it today. If you enjoy the Dafler family story, we’ll explain how you can contribute your memories and information to our effort to make a new, updated Dafler book.

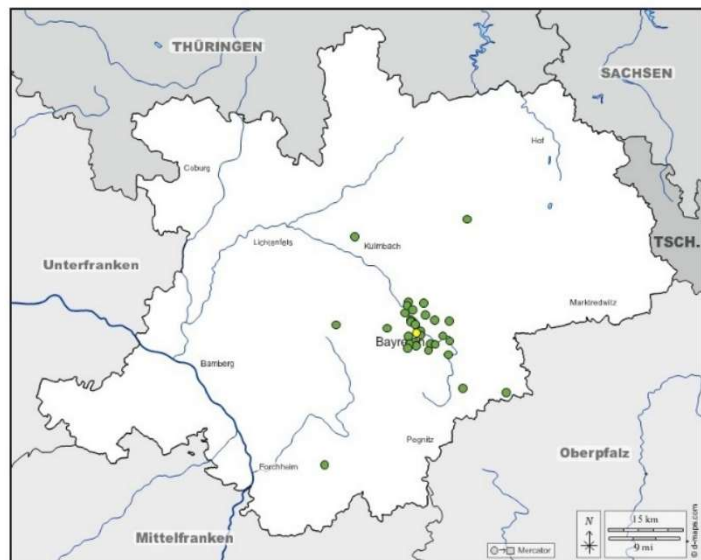

Once upon a time, in a land we now call Germany, a farmer and his wife had a son. They named him Johann, like his father, but probably called him by his middle name, Wolfgang – a common tradition in German families at the time.¹ His last name was Dörfler – pronounced “Dare-fleur,” which simply means “inhabitant of a village.”² This humble surname befitted the simple life the family led.

His family lived in a small village named Denzenlohe, which bordered a small town named Heinersreuth, which was north of the city of Bayreuth. His father was born nearby, had bought this small farm³, and he expected to live his whole life there. His father before him had been a farmer in this area all his life, as had his grandfather. His great-grandfather had lived in this very same town too, as had most of his ancestors. A few worked as blacksmiths; others as millers or stonemasons – but the rest were farmers, too.

These villages and towns were part of a collection of states that together were called Franconia. Since the great Thirty Years’ War had ended in 1648, the patchwork of small states was left mostly to itself. The farmer lived in an area overseen by a margrave, and life was stable for the poor people who lived there.

But this peace was upset in 1792, when the last margrave gave up his throne and the land was joined to the much larger state of Prussia. While being part of the great and powerful Kingdom of Prussia led to greater protection and possibly greater wealth for the villagers in Denzenlohe, it also made them pawns to be traded among the great powers of Europe – the princes of the Holy Roman Empire, the kings of England and France, the Pope, and many other rulers great and small. Disaster came to pass in 1810. Napoleon, Emperor of France, had allied with the southern German state of Bavaria in the great

European Wars of the Third and Fourth Coalitions, and as a result Prussia was forced to give the former Franconian states to Catholic Bavaria. For the villagers, they lived now under the constant threats of invasion, occupation, taxes, and religious upheaval.⁴

Young Wolfgang was the oldest son of the family and the second child to survive infancy. In time, his mother and father would welcome nine more children, though only four of these brothers and sisters would survive to their third birthday.⁵ He was born in 1798, making him Prussian at birth, but became Bavarian as a twelve-year-old. He worshipped as a Protestant,⁶ but was ruled by Catholics. The stress and uncertainty of the changes in the world around were compounded by the difficulty of daily farm work. Their farm was a small one, and there were seven mouths to feed. Wolfgang likely got little rest or respite, and his father was a difficult taskmaster.⁷ Agriculture was notoriously fickle, and lean years and scant harvests were ever-present threats. The Dörfler family struggled through the worldwide climate shock of 1816, the “year without summer,” caused by an Indonesian volcanic eruption. Several years of crop failures followed, which devastated poor farmers.⁸

Wolfgang continued this life where each day was the same as the last for thirty-nine years. The chance at a military life (perhaps a possible escape, but perhaps a violent death) arose when he was twenty-two, but the conscription examiners found him “totally unfit for military service.”⁹ As a result, he returned to the farm. Each day he rose, tended the fields, cared for the cattle, and went to bed; going to worship on Sundays and living in the same home where he was born. And this went on, year after year, until his father became old and ill.

In Bavaria at this time, farm families struggled under the difficulty of scratching out food from the land, but they also had a different threat when their parents died. The custom was that the farmland would be split equally among the surviving children. But for Wolfgang and his four siblings, this was scant consolation. They knew that the farm was scarcely large enough now to feed their family and provide them with prospects for future success. Dividing this land five ways would sentence each of the resulting families to even deeper poverty; perhaps even death. And four new homes and four new barns would be needed for the families to live in and store their tools and livestock – where would that money come from? Even less land could be worked once some of it was covered with buildings.¹⁰

Wolfgang must have realized this, and he made a plan with his brother to take a chance at a better life. When their father died in 1839, Wolfgang and his siblings agreed to sell the farm instead of splitting it. Twenty-one hundred guilders was distributed between the siblings as the legacy of the Dörfler farm in Denzenlohe.¹¹ About 60 of those guilders would buy a steerage ticket to America.¹² Leaving their sister, brother, and mother, Wolfgang and his brother Konrad took their shares of the inheritance and struck out to find their fortunes in a new land – the land of promise, America.¹³ Wolfgang knew he was unlikely to ever again see the family he left behind.

Wolfgang's route to America was long, but well-traveled. Many enterprising men and women had already made this trek ahead of him. He carried little. In his wallet he had a passport – number 61, issued by the Police Council of Bayreuth, containing a rough description of his height (5 feet, 5 inches) and appearance – red hair, blue eyes, long face, pale skin. Next to the passport he carried his emigration permit and a letter of reference from the church in Heinersreuth that attested to his character and reputation. The passport gathered the waypoints of his departure from the confederation of German states – first the city of Bayreuth on September 5th, 1839, then an intermediate stop in Duderstadt in Lower Saxony on September 12th, and finally, permission to depart for America from Bremen on the northern coast on September 20th.¹⁴

Wolfgang was upon the water for 77 days, he would later tell his children; three days by steam and 74 days sailing, until he finally reached the new and foreign shore of Baltimore¹⁵. When he landed, he may have been surprised not just at how different things were in Baltimore but also just how similar they were. Baltimore had a sizeable German immigrant population,¹⁶ and the German Society of Maryland protected newcomers from the worst sorts of exploitation.¹⁷ The German language was not the dominant language, but many German speakers had made a home in Baltimore.

In two years, Wolfgang had quickly established a new life for himself in the United States. By 1841, Wolfgang had traveled westward from Baltimore and established himself in the German settlements of Carroll County, Maryland, one of the newest counties of the Old Line State. Here, land was plentiful, and he had neighbors who spoke his language. Not only was he able to worship as a Lutheran in his native German language (the records of Zion Lutheran Church, a German church in Manchester, records the baptism of their son, Christian, in 1847¹⁸), he was guaranteed that the state could never again name a preferred religion. He had also found someone to start a life with. His bride, Rosanna Catherine (who seemed to prefer Catherine, her middle name, as seen on most legal documents), had also come to Baltimore, but as a child. She departed Germany as a five-year-old, traveling as an orphan with her siblings to guide and protect her. She celebrated her sixth birthday on board a ship sailing west, arriving in the United States in 1831.¹⁹ When they met, she may have been an ideal partner despite their 27-year gap in age. Comfortable in both German and English and experienced in American customs,

Catherine could smooth the way for her newly arrived husband. Wolfgang had the money, experience, and skills to establish a household. They shared their Christian faith and the bravery to confront the unknown together.

In Carroll County Wolfgang and Catherine lived a hardworking life. By 1845, they had two children.²⁰ On September 2nd, Wolfgang was met by two Americans from his church at the local courthouse, where they attested to his character and his desire to become an American citizen.²¹ As he recited the oath, Wolfgang knew that for the first time, he would have a voice in how his country was led. No longer would his family be subject to the whims of dukes, princes and kings. He now shared the rights and responsibilities of a citizen in governing this country.

Wolfgang initially worked as a laborer to feed his family, but by 1853 he was able to pay $70 for “Apple Brandy Forest,” a seven-acre property near Westminster to farm on his own.²² Six years later, the increased income allowed him to upgrade the family to a forty-four-acre parcel for $1,000, near Hampstead.²³ Even with this newfound prosperity, he still may have felt pressure to fit in. Perhaps as a concession to the confusion that an umlaut presents to English speakers, or maybe simply to blend in with American society, Johann Wolfgang Dörfler began to refer to himself at some point between 1845 and the 1850 census as “John Dafler”. This new appellation introduced a new and unique surname for himself and his family, but represented an additional separation from the heritage he left behind. John and Catherine made dear friends in this new land. The names of many of their sons – John Earhart, David Henry, Lewis Phillip, and Melchior Harrison – were taken from the names of their newfound neighbors.

Johann Dörfler arrived in Baltimore in December 1839 - marked ①. By 1850 he was living in Carroll County, near Westminster ②. Dörfler farms were located southeast of Westminster ③ (1853-1859) and south of Hampstead ④ (1859-approx. 1866).

Clouds on the horizon warned of threats that John may have hoped he had left behind in Europe. A new political party, the Know-Nothings, had gained popularity in Maryland in the 1850s, including in Carroll County, and he must have been dismayed by their anti-immigrant rhetoric and its apparent acceptance by his neighbors. The John Brown raid on the Federal arsenal at Harpers Ferry in 1859 occurred only 50 miles to the west, just over the Potomac River in Virginia. Carroll County was a microcosm for the state of Maryland and the entire Union – split in its sentiments regarding slavery and states’ rights. Less than two years later, John’s new country was at war with itself – and he, Catherine, and his seven children found themselves once again the victims of political conflict, trapped between powerful armies.

John and the Dafler family survived the Civil War. Carroll County largely avoided the presence of either Union or Confederate troops until 1863, when both armies passed through on their way to their fateful meeting in Gettysburg. The Dafler family would almost certainly have encountered Union troops guarding the railroad supply line that fed and armed General Meade's troops with supplies from Baltimore. The end of the war did not end the bloodshed. The presses of a Southern-sympathizing newspaper in Westminster were destroyed, and the publisher killed in a local tavern, for printing an editorial that was judged to be critical of Abraham Lincoln a week before his assassination. (The killers of the publisher were acquitted.)²⁴

Whether to escape further political conflict or to seek greener pastures, John and Catherine sold their property in Maryland and moved north.²⁵ Census records indicate that around 1866, they moved to their final home – a farm near the town of Johnsville (now the western part of New Lebanon), in Montgomery County, Ohio.²⁶ Why the family chose Ohio for their destination is not known for certain, but some clues are available. The Miami Valley of Ohio is well suited for agriculture, with naturally flat and fertile land. German Lutheran settlement was also prevalent in this area. By 1870, John Dafler – now 72 – owned a farm valued at $1,000 that he shared with his wife and seven youngest children – ranging from seventeen (Lewis) to newborn (Upton). At least two of his oldest four children lived nearby. Christian was living and working on a farm in neighboring Jefferson Township, east of his father's farm. David lived in Twin Township, Preble County, just to the west, with a wife and daughter, starting a farm of his own. John lived on this farm until his death in December 1887.²⁷

From this anchor in Ohio, the Dafler family truly took root. The children of John and Catherine Dafler started families of their own and quickly grew the family tree. At Catherine's death in 1914, she was noted as having 40 grandchildren and 47 great-grandchildren in her obituary.²⁸ The 1947 "Dafler Book" included 295 direct descendants of this family – 239 of whom were still living at the time of publication. As of the 2010 census, 191 people in the United States have the surname "Dafler".²⁹ Many – perhaps most or even all – are descendants of these two immigrants.

There are so many more questions to answer and stories to share about the Dafler family and its experiences. Our entire knowledge of Johann Wolfgang's Franconian origins come from a single source, and, sadly, we know almost nothing of his wife's history. We don't know where or when they met, or precisely where or when they married. What became of their traveling companions from Denzenlohe? Why did they move to Ohio – why not Pennsylvania, or somewhere else? Evidence to fill in such gaps in their life may still exist, waiting to be found in new databases being added to the internet with unprecedented details. We also seek to compile information about the lives of John and Catherine's descendants. We know already that their lives include stories of joy and tragedy, tales of wartime heroism and service, traditions of hard work and strong faith, and athletic and industrial achievement. We are proud of the history we know so far, and we want to record and share the fullest tribute of what it means to be a Dafler for our descendants to come. It is our goal to create a full Dafler Family Tree and a detailed Dafler Family History as a lasting tribute to our forebearers.

We will search the records and newspapers for the facts – but for the stories and photos, we ask for your help. If you have a connection to the John and Catherine Dafler family, we would appreciate learning what you know as we gather the information necessary to document the Dafler family story and bring it up to date. We have established daflerfamily.org as the centralized location for everyone to share what they know and get the latest information on our family – as well as a means for you to keep in touch with your Dafler family members, far and wide.

There are three specific ways we would ask you to help:

- On the following pages, you will see family record sheets for you to use to record the pertinent details for your family. Providing this information, as well as the information you know about your parents, grandparents, and siblings, will allow us to advance the Dafler family tree from 1947 to the present day. We will not publish the information we gather about living persons, except to members of our family. See daflerfamily.org for instructions on how to submit your charts.
- While facts are the skeleton of the family tree, stories are the body. We'd love to hear stories, big and small, about your experiences and the experiences you remember hearing from your parents and grandparents. Our website includes forums where you can share stories or photographs, or you can reply to prompts with your specific memories.
- Finally – please help us spread the word! Please make sure your parents, cousins, and other Dafler relatives are aware of our project and get a chance to help!

In gratitude for your consideration:

APPENDIX A

Descendants of John Wolfgang and Rosanna Catherine Dafler

In the following section, you will find the Dafler Family Tree as it was published in 1947 in the first edition of the "Dafler Book". No attempt has been made to corroborate the names or dates herein. Our future research efforts will substantiate and expand upon the information here by adding greater context to the historical data and adding information about the families formed after the tree's initial publication.

The data is organized by family: information first about a husband-and-wife pair (including the dates of their marriage and, if appropriate, their divorce), followed by a list of any children. If any of those children subsequently formed their own family, a cross-reference to the page where their family record (or records) begin is listed after their name. If no cross-reference is listed, then no record of a family was noted in the original Dafler Family Tree.

If your surname is Dafler or can be traced to Dafler, we believe you should be able to find a shared ancestor in these pages.

APPENDIX B

Ancestors of John Wolfgang Dafler

In 2012, Wes Dafler visited the Dörfler family source village of Heinersreuth, in the Upper Franconia region of Bavaria, Germany. In an unexpected and serendipitous turn of events, he returned with nine pages of ancestral information for the father of the Dafler lineage. From a letter describing that day:

“The church letter in the Dafler Book indicated that Johann Wolfgang was released from the congregation in Heinersreuth, so we decided to see if the church was still in existence. Heinersreuth only has one church, which is Lutheran, but it was only erected in 1937. On a hunch we decided to check at the fellowship hall, where we unexpectedly got a lucky break.

The church secretary was in her office and invited us in. She spoke enough English that I was able to explain that we were looking for more information on our family history, and she offered to put us in touch with the town’s amateur historian, Annaliese Uckele. We accepted, and she asked our names for the introduction. When I said “Dafler,” she immediately corrected me. “Dörfler, you mean? There are many Dörflers here,” she said. This was the first independent confirmation that we had with the information in the Dafler Book. (It was also the first time I was pleased by a different spelling and pronunciation of my surname!)

We met with Frau Uckele for about an hour. She has digitized the records of the five town churches and collated them, and she had published the results in a book. Within 5 minutes of our arrival, she had found Johann Wolfgang Dörfler under the entry of his father, Johann Konrad. The birth date, town of residence, and sibling name from the church letter (as recorded in the Dafler Book) also matches the records provided in her research materials. This correlation convinced me that her records and our records referred to the same person.

Frau Uckele provided me with one final, but incredibly valuable, item. She was able to provide a complete record of the ancestors of Johann Wolfgang Dörfler from her collection of church records. As this data is based on the original church records and has been published in Germany, I believe this information may be considered a reliable record of the ancestry of Johann Wolfgang Dörfler – and, therefore, of all Daflers in America today.”

This data has been reformatted using the same convention used in Appendix A. On the following page, the person listed as Johann Wolfgang Dörfler, 3rd child of Johann Conrad and Anna Margaretha Dörfler, is believed to be the same person known in the United States as John Wolfgang Dafler by the time of his death.
